European Election: Greens Can Win

The European election is held under a proportional voting system so Every vote counts.

It's Close

9%

Green vote last time

10%

Votes needed to win

Last time round the Green Party needed just 1% more to win a seat.

Your vote can make a difference this time.

Vote GREEN on 22nd May – every vote counts!

In the European election, parties gain seats based on the percentage of votes cast. This is fairer than the 'first past the post' system used in General elections.

There are seven Members of the European Parliament for Eastern region, which includes Suffolk. Each party puts forward a 'regional list' of candidates. Electors have one vote. The parties are then allocated a number of MEPs reflecting the share of the vote they receive.

If one in ten people vote Green, a Green MEP should be elected for our region.

Poll Position

A poll of people's voting intentions suggests that the Green Party could be on course to winning an MEP seat in Eastern region.

The poll, conducted by leading market research company ComRes, put the Green Party on 12% and the LibDems on 7%. If this is reflected in the European election on 22nd May then the Green Party's Rupert Read will win the MEP seat currently held by the LibDems.

Greens a Major Force in EU

The Green Party holds 48 seats in the European Parliament. The Green MEPs come from across Europe – including London and the South East of England – and are part of the fourth largest political group. They have more influence than the Conservative and UKIP MEPs, who are in smaller political groups.

Green MEPs play a constructive role in working for a better future. In the last five years they have:

- Won tougher climate change targets and environmental standards
- Secured a cap on bankers' bonuses
- Campaigned against cuts to public services
- Helped ban animal testing for cosmetics
- Pushed through a ban on bee-killing toxins

What are you voting for?

Sometimes it seems as if politics can be a negative business. If you vote for Labour, the Conservatives or UKIP you know what you are voting against.

If you vote Green, you can also be clear what you are voting against: against growing inequality in society, against nuclear weapons, against trade rules that only benefit big business... against politics as usual.

But by voting Green in the European election you can also be clear what you are voting for:

- For clean air, safe streets and a better quality of life
- For strong local communities, fair pay and protection of public services
- For democratic reform of the EU, so more decisions are made by elected MEPs rather than unelected bureaucrats
- For international action to address climate change
- For an economy that meets our local needs, conserves the earth's resources and values the natural world
- For promoting peace in Europe and the wider world

Rupert's Pledges to You

The Green Party's lead candidate has published three reports highlighting key issues he will address if elected as your Green MEP:

The full reports can be read online at: www.eastern.greenparty.org.uk

End the Food Crisis

Demand for food banks is on the rise across Eastern region. Rupert Read is challenging the welfare reforms that are forcing more people to turn to food banks.

Food prices have doubled in the past ten years, according to the Food and Agriculture Organisation. Government welfare reforms are pushing more people into poverty. As a result use of food banks has grown substantially.

Rupert Read said: "We need a Living Wage for those in work and a decent welfare system

Green Party Leader Natalie Bennett visits Norwich Foodbank

that enables everyone to get enough to eat. We also need to address the root cause of rising food prices by producing more food locally with less reliance on expensive oil."

An Energy Revolution

Green energy will create thousands of jobs and regenerate our coastal towns.

Rupert Read is calling for investment in renewable energy to avoid a long term cost-of-living crisis caused by the end of cheap oil.

The Green Party is calling for an 'energy revolution' to create a clean, renewable energy supply for the future. The plan includes investment in tidal, wave, wind and solar power plus measures to reduce energy use to replace outdated fossil fuels and nuclear.

Rupert Read said: "It is only green measures that can address the 'cost of living crisis'

Rupert Read visits the Orbis Energy Centre in Lowestoft to discuss marine based renewable energy projects because fossil fuels are just going to go on getting more and more expensive. We can also create thousands more jobs in this region in green energy."

A Transport Revolution

Rupert Read has set out a plan for a Transport Revolution. He is arguing against new road building in the region and calling for investment in public transport, walking and cycling.

Rupert Read has a vision for an efficient, reliable and green transport system. His five-point plan would support local businesses, commuters and families:

- 1) Return railways to public ownership.
- 2) New EASTERN card, modelled on the OYSTER card that has proven so successful in London.
- 3) Electrification of Green campaigners call for railways to be re-nationalised railways and re-opening of lines. 4) Re-regulation of local bus services – again, copying the successful London model. 5) Investment in cycling and walking routes and car share schemes in local communities.

What Green MEPs Would do for Suffolk

Better Broadband

The Green Party would:

- Improve broadband access across rural areas
- Introduce a European Digital Bill of Rights to stop unnecessary surveillance online

Businesses and homes in many parts of Suffolk still suffer from slow internet speeds and poor reliability.

Following campaigning by Green Councillors, broadband has been rolled out to many Suffolk villages. However, with other communities still waiting, the Green Party will continue to press local government and BT to improve rural provision.

Green MEPs are also campaigning for a Digital Bill of Rights to protect citizens from unnecessary online surveillance by government and corporations.

Green Councillors are overseeing broadband improvements

Address Flood Risks

The Green Party would:

- Claim the available but untouched EU money for flooding mitigation
- Reinstate the 1,700 Environment Agency jobs that were recently cut

1,700 jobs have been cut at the Environment Agency, despite repeated floods recently which have affected our region, including Lowestoft and Bury St Edmunds.

The Green Party has unveiled a ten-point plan for dealing with the floods. This includes reversing the Environment Agency's cuts and increasing its budget from available EU funds which currently remain unclaimed. This would enable the agency to effectively protect communities from the impact of floods and coastal erosion.

Green Party Leader Natalie Bennett visits East Anglia following recent flooding

Less Obesity, More Cycling

The Green Party would:

- Ensure all areas are served by an affordable and integrated public transport system
- Promote cycling and walking routes over new road building

The proportion of UK commutes made by bike has dropped over the last ten years, according to census data. During the same period obesity has increased.

The Green Party is pushing for the promotion of cycling to help tackle obesity and reduce carbon emissions. Millions of pounds that are destined for road building could be diverted into making urban areas safe for cyclists and teaching cycling in schools.

Research has shown that obesity is worse where there are more dangerous roads.

Rupert Read calls for road safety measures
